Objections Aren't Rejections

Most objections from people you know aren't real refusals — they're reflexes. People say "not interested" the way they say "fine" when asked how they're doing. Once you understand this, objections stop feeling personal.

"I'm not interested"	→ "I don't fully understand what you're offering yet"
"I'm happy with my current setup"	→ "I haven't compared it to anything recently"
"I'll think about it"	→ "I need a little more info or a nudge to act"
"I don't have time right now"	→ "Remind me at a better moment"
"I'm locked into a contract"	→ "I'm not sure — I haven't actually checked"
"Just send me some info"	→ "I'm mildly interested but not ready to commit"

■ The golden rule:
Never argue with an objection. Acknowledge it, ask one curious question, then let silence do the work.

The AQA Method

Acknowledge

Validate their feeling without agreeing it's final.

> "Totally understand" / "That makes sense" / "No worries at all"

This disarms defensiveness. They feel heard, not sold to.

Q

Ask One Question

Respond with a single curious question — not a counter-argument.

> "Just curious — do you know what you're actually paying per month after all fees?" / "Are you locked in a contract or just happy with what you've got?"

Questions invite dialogue. Arguments invite resistance.

Allow Silence

After your question — stop talking. Let them respond. Don't fill the gap.

> [Say nothing. Wait for them to respond. The next person who speaks, loses — and it won't be you.]

Silence creates space to think. Most people will talk themselves into interest.

01 "I'm happy with my current processor"

"Totally — most people are until they actually see what they're paying. Do you know your effective rate after all fees?"

02 "I'm locked in a contract"

"No worries! Just curious — are you sure, or is it that you haven't checked recently? TechSavvy can tell you in 5 minutes."

03 "I don't have time right now"

"Completely understand. It's a 10-minute call whenever works — want me to have them reach out next week instead?"

04 "I'll think about it"

"Of course! What would help you decide? Sometimes seeing the numbers side-by-side makes it a lot clearer."

05 "Just send me some info"

"Absolutely. I'll send it over — and if anything catches your eye, I'll connect you with the team for a free look at your statement."

06 "I tried switching before and it was a hassle"

"That's really common, honestly. TechSavvy's whole thing is zero monthly fees, no contracts, and simple setup. Worth a 10-minute comparison?"

Follow-Up Timing — The Right Cadence

ct schedule to use without ever feeling

Day 1
Initial outreach
Send your opener via text or in person. Plant the seed.

Day 3
Soft follow-up
If no reply: "Hey, just following up on that TechSavvy thing — still happy to connect you if you're curious!"

Day 7
Value drop
Drop a fact: "Did you know most businesses pay 3–4.5% effective rate? TechSavvy can cut that to 0%."

Day 14
Final nudge
Last message: "Last thing on this — still open to a free 10-min look if timing works. No pressure either way!"

Day 30+
Plant a seed
Move on but don't delete them. Check in naturally next time you talk. Circumstances change.

■ Follow-up rule of thumb:
4 touches maximum. After that, move on. People remember who respected their time — and they'll often come back when they're ready.

Follow-Up Messages — Copy & Send

These are ready-to-send messages. Personalize the name and details, then send as-is.

Day 3 — Soft Follow-Up

Hey [Name]! Just circling back on that TechSavvy Hawaii thing I mentioned. Still happy to connect you if you're ever curious about what you're paying in fees. Zero pressure — just want to make sure you have the option. ■

Day 7 — Value Drop

Hey! Quick stat: the average small business pays $800–$2,000/month in processing fees they don't fully see. TechSavvy eliminates that for most businesses. Still happy to set up a free look at your statement — no commitment at all.

Day 14 — Final Nudge

Hey [Name] — last mention of this, I promise ■ If you ever want a free 10-minute comparison of what you're paying vs. what you could pay, just say the word and I'll connect you. If not, totally cool — just wanted to make sure you had the option!

After "send me info"

Hey! Here's a quick overview of TechSavvy Hawaii: [attach PDF or link]. Short version: zero monthly fees, no contracts, $399 terminal (one-time), most businesses save $800–$2,000/month. Want me to connect you for a free statement analysis?

When to Stop — and How to Keep the Relationship

Knowing when to stop is just as important as knowing what to say. Pushing too hard damages friendships and your reputation.

Stop after these signals:

- They've said no or "not interested" twice — respect it completely
- They've gone silent after 3 follow-ups — let it go for now
- They said "I'm not looking to change anything" clearly — take them at their word
- You can sense tension in the relationship — it's not worth the referral

How to exit gracefully:

> "Totally understand — I won't bring it up again! Just wanted to make sure you had the option. Let me know if you ever change your mind."

This closes the loop cleanly, preserves the friendship, and leaves the door open forever.

Remember:

A "no" today is often a "yes" in 6 months when their contract expires, their bill goes up, or their Relationships are worth more than any single referral. Always protect the relationship first.
